

Dr Ulrika Johansson

University Hospitals Bristol NHS Foundation Trust

Originally from the west coast of Sweden, I moved to Britain after my University degree (Immunology) and obtained my PhD from Imperial College, London. Academia was nice, however I found it interesting to work in a more direct health care setting, and so after graduation I moved to work as a Clinical Scientist with Prof Marion Macey at Bart's and The London. In 2009 I took up the offer to set up a flow cytometry laboratory at the Bristol Royal Infirmary, where I still am working.

ESCCA certainly played a role in my 'upbringing' as a clinical flow cytometrist and I feel honored to have been asked to put my name forward for the council.

If elected, I aim to work together with the council and our community to continue the work already started on harmonisation of key flow cytometry assays.
